An armistice has been decided on to continue until the end of March, which is, however, not to effect the blockade of the Baltic ports.

The Austrian propositions were formally paraphrased as the basis of negotivations, and the meeting then adjourned.

On Tuesday there was no meeting, but or. Wednesday the conference was again in session, but nothing transpired.

Among the rumors abounding it was asserted that Russia while assenting to the destruction of Schastopol, Bomarsund, and Nicolaef, refuses to relinquish the Protectorate of the Greek Church.

The feeling of hatred which was roused against the English at the opening of the war is still violent. Friendship had too long existed between the Russian and the English courts to severed with impunity. The hostility of France will soon be forgotten, but many Russians, who are high in rank, do not hesitate to say, "England we never can forgive." Henceforward they will live in hopes of taking revenge upon her.

Russian has suffered severely from the war, but less than the Western powers suppose. The internal resources of the country have been much developed within the past two years, and the world will soon see that Russia is stonger in every particular than she was hefore the war commenced.—N.
